What are the humanities?

The humanities can be described as the study of how people process and document the human experience. Since humans have been able, we have used philosophy, literature, religion, art, music, history and language to understand and record our world. These modes of expression have become some of the subjects that traditionally fall under the humanities umbrella. Knowledge of these records of human experience gives us the opportunity to feel a sense of connection to those who have come before us, as well as to our contemporaries.

“Kill the Classics”

The scientific study of society has passed 175 years old with the term coined by August Comte in 1838. In many ways, the thinkers of the nineteenth century continue to pervade modern sociology. A scholarly debate has developed about the continued importance of these classical works in modern research. Read the article and answer the questions provided.
